

Leibham taking the high road, hopefully to Congress

Wisconsin 7:03 p.m. CDT August 7, 2014

As a conservative living in the 6th Congressional District, I have never been excited about the candidates for U.S. Congress — this election is different. On Tuesday I will enthusiastically cast my ballot for Joe Leibham. Issue after issue, Joe has stood on the side of the people.

He is a key leader in the state Senate who helped pass Gov. Walker's much needed budget reforms. He fought to give parents more choice in their children's education, and he introduced a common-sense bill that would require a photo ID at the polls. Despite criticism from the left and his primary opponents who favored a more watered-down version of the bill, Joe didn't back down and stood up for what was right; his bill was just found constitutional by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

Even though his opponents have caused the tone of the race for Congress to go negative, Joe's campaign has taken the high road. Anyone who knows Joe personally knows that he is a nice guy, and his opponents have used this to paint him as a political moderate. Nothing about Joe's record says "moderate." He simply believes that you don't need to run down someone's reputation to run for office.

Joe Leibham's campaign and record demonstrate that he is not only a principled conservative, but a man of integrity. He has represented us in Madison in this manner, and he will do the same in Washington.
